Statement As a painter of themes that connect human relationships of past and present, linking ancient myths with our current every day lives, I have always been interested in the possibilities of "the portrait" in painting. From the austerity of Holbein to the grace of Van Dyck, I have studied the genre intensely. Gilbert Stuart's portraits of skaters fueled the fire in a recent series I painted since living here in Rhode Island. The organization of color, the language of light and dark, and the mastery of the human form, all contribute to the greatest portraits, but it seems to me that it is the the sensitivity to the human spirit that makes a portrait painting most memorable. I take these inspirations with me when painting a portrait, attempting to gather likeness and character while simultaneously aspiring to make a strong work of art.
